Historical Note

Within the current boundaries of the Archdiocese of St. Louis, the first school was Ste. Genevieve Academy, founded by Father James Maxwell in 1807 at Ste. Genevieve Parish in Ste. Genevieve, Missouri.

On September 14, 1818, Sister Rose Philippine Duchesne and the Religious of the Sacred Heart opened the first tuition-free girls' school west of the Mississippi in St. Charles, Missouri. In 1818, Bishop William Valentine DuBourg appointed Father Francois Niel as the curate of the cathedral and headmaster of the new school in St. Louis. Known as St. Louis Academy, the first classes began November 16, 1818.

Over the years, many parishes chose to open parochial schools, which were primarily run and taught by religious sisters and clergy. During his tenure from 1893 to 1905, Archbishop John Joseph Kain established the first archdiocesan school commission to regulate uniforms and curriculum, and he required every parish to maintain a parochial school as suggested by the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore in 1884.

In 1910, Archbishop Glennon appointed Father Aloysius V. Garthoeffner as Superintendent of Catholic Schools and created the high school development committee. A few Catholic high schools already existed through parishes or religious orders. In 1911, Garthoeffner established the first three archdiocesan schools: Kenrick High School for boys at Sts. Peter and Paul, Kain for girls at St. Theresa, and Rosati for girls at St. Francis de Sales. The schools did not charge tuition, and Archbishop Glennon set up the Catholic High School Association to finance the schools through donor contributions. Rosati and Kain High Schools for girls were combined a couple years later into Rosati-Kain High School.

Before 1951, schools in the archdiocese were segregated, and Black students could not attend their local parochial schools. A group of Black Catholics pushed the archdiocese to open a high school where their children could attend, and St. Joseph's High School opened in 1937. Soon after Joseph E. Ritter was installed as archbishop in the Archdiocese of St. Louis, he desegregated archdiocesan schools. In 1951, he closed St. Joseph High School along with other institutions that were formerly Black-only to further discourage segregation.

Under Archbishops Ritter and John J. Carberry, the high school education system was expanded through the 1960s, experiencing peak enrollment. The 1970s saw an increase of lay faculty and staff in schools, and a decrease in student enrollment. Over the years, schools have been closed or consolidated due to declining enrollment. In 1991, Archbishop John L. May founded the Today and Tomorrow Foundation to provide tuition-assistance scholarships to families for parochial elementary school education.

Administrative Structure and Superintendents

The administrative structure of the Catholic Education system of St. Louis has changed over time. One constant is that the archbishop is the final authority on all archdiocesan matters including education. The Catholic Education Board and Office establish policy and provide guidance for diocesan and parish high schools and all parochial elementary schools. Private elementary and high schools that are run by religious orders do not report to the office. They are responsible to the archbishop in matters pertaining to their character as Catholic schools and their religious education program.

When Archbishop Glennon created the Superintendent of Schools role in 1910, it oversaw both diocesan high schools and parochial schools. In 1917, it appears that two superintendent positions were created to oversee high schools and parochial elementary schools respectively. The positions were combined in 1959 as Superintendent of Schools and renamed Superintendent of Catholic Education in 1981.

Scope and Content

Series 1: Office Administration, 1905-2018 includes records produced by the office and related to the office administration and school operations. The series begins with governance, directories of staff and schools, calendars, minutes, marketing, and press releases. There is correspondence with archbishops and bishops, pastors, principal, school administrators, and parish boards of education. Topical files are organized alphabetically and may contain correspondence, reports, publications, studies, minutes, and working materials. The last part of the series are elementary school handbooks and curriculum guides.

Series 2: School Enrollment Books 1886-1971 includes enrollment books received by Catholic Education Office for some parochial elementary and high schools in St. Louis City, covering 1886 to 1971.

Series 3: National Catholic Education Association (NCEA), 1976-2017 contains materials related to NCEA including correspondence, minutes, school data and statistical reports, and meeting planning for the St. Louis conventions in 2003 and 2017.

Series 4: Board of Catholic Education, 1959-2000 includes minutes, constitution, finance, directories, reports, and publications related to the Board of Catholic Education as formed in 1959 by the first "Superintendent of Catholic Education" Rev. James T. Curtin.

Series 5: High School Administration and Operations, 1909-2012 contains materials from the high school boards of education, administrative files from the Office of Catholic Education, and files related to specific high schools. The high school board was first called the Catholic High School Association, and then Archdiocesan Parish High School Board. The board files are arranged chronologically and include the constitution and bylaws, minutes, reports, and finances from the board of education.

Series 6: Finance, 1950-2007 includes financial assessments and budgets for schools and programs, correspondence, and materials from the Archdiocesan Development Appeal. This series is restricted to the public.

Series 7: Personnel, 1951-2000 contains correspondence and reports related to teacher salaries and benefits, personnel policies and manuals, candidate searches, and employee files on archdiocesan and religious order teachers. This series is restricted to the public.

Series 8: Teachers Unions, 1979-2012 includes materials from Association of Catholic Elementary Educators (ACEE), Parish Teacher Compensation Committee (PTCC), the Archbishop's Commission on Parish Teacher Relations and the "New Partnership" established by Archbishop Justin Rigali in 1997-1998. The series is arranged in rough chronological order, and contains minutes, correspondence, reports, news clippings, and publications from the teachers' unions.

Series 9: Audio-Visual and Artifacts, 1984-2002 contains audio-visual materials and artifacts, including VHS cassette tapes, 3.5" floppy disks, and a banner and bumper sticker.

Restrictions

Records are closed to the public for at least 30 years after date of creation. The Archives reserves the right to restrict any materials.

Records in Series 6, 7, and 8 are restricted indefinitely to researchers due to privacy issues.
